

Title:

**Manuel L. Manahan, Jr. vs. The Court of Appeals and People of the Philippines**

Facts:

This case revolves around two Equipment Lease Agreements entered into on 10 May 1976 and 16 September 1976 between Manuel L. Manahan, Jr. ("Petitioner") and IFC Leasing and Acceptance Corporation ("IFC"), involving an Isuzu dump truck and a Kimco Hough JH65CN Payloader, respectively. Due to alleged defaults in payments, totaling P410,085.62, IFC filed a complaint for a sum of money with replevin and damages against the petitioner in the Court of First Instance of Rizal on 15 March 1977.

On 03 April 1978, a decision was issued in favor of IFC, but the execution of the judgment was not pursued. Rather, on 23 June 1981, IFC sent a demand letter to the petitioner regarding his unsettled accounts, which was unheeded. Consequently, IFC filed an estafa charge against the petitioner on 15 March 1983.

During the trial, evidence was presented showing the petitioner had received the equipment, failed to make payments, and further failed to return the dump truck as obligated upon the termination of the lease. He admitted to sub-leasing the dump truck and not being able to reclaim it afterward.

On 27 July 1989, the Regional Trial Court found the petitioner guilty of estafa, sentencing him to prison and ordering him to pay reparation. The Court of Appeals affirmed this decision on 21 May 1993, with a modification regarding the penalty.

Issues:

1. Whether or not the elements of estafa, particularly misappropriation or conversion, were present in the petitioner's failure to return the leased equipment.
2. Whether the petitioner's inability to return the dump truck due to circumstances beyond his control could negate the criminal intent required for estafa.
3. The applicability of civil liability notwithstanding the determination of criminal liability.

Court's Decision:

The Philippine Supreme Court found merit in the petition. It held that while the petitioner violated the lease agreement by sub-leasing the dump truck without IFC's consent, this breach of contract did not automatically constitute estafa. The Court noted that for estafa to be committed under Article 315 (1) (b) of the Revised Penal Code, there must be clear evidence of misappropriation or conversion. The Court concluded that the petitioner's failure to return the dump truck did not amount to estafa as there was no incontrovertible evidence of his intent to defraud IFC. As such, the petitioner was acquitted of the criminal charge of estafa but was still held civilly liable for the value of the lost dump truck, amounting to P55,000.00, with interest.

### Doctrine:

This case reiterates the doctrine that the elements of estafa include the conversion or misappropriation of property received to the prejudice of another. However, clear evidence of intent to defraud or misappropriate property must be established beyond reasonable doubt for criminal liability to attach. Additionally, a breach of a leasing agreement, without more, may not necessarily constitute estafa if the lessee made efforts to comply with the terms of the lease or to mitigate damages thereafter.

### Class Notes:

- Key Elements of Estafa under Philippine Law:

1. Receipt of property under circumstances involving the obligation to deliver or return the same.
2. Misappropriation or conversion of such property by the offender, or denial of receipt.
3. The misappropriation, conversion, or denial is to the prejudice of another.
4. There is a demand by the offended party to the offender.

- Civil Liability vs. Criminal Intent: Acquittal from criminal charges due to lack of evidence of intent does not necessarily exempt the accused from civil liabilities arising from the same act.

- Breaches of Contract: Violation of a lease agreement provisions, such as unauthorized sub-leasing, may lead to civil but not necessarily criminal liability in the absence of clear intent to defraud.

### Historical Background:

This case illustrates the nuanced application of criminal and civil law principles in the context of lease agreements and the obligations arising therefrom. It underscores the high threshold for evidence required in criminal cases, especially for crimes involving fraud or deceit like estafa, as contrasted with the preponderance of evidence standard in civil cases.
