

COMMISSION ON HIGHER EDUCATION, PETITIONER, VS. HON. JUDGE EVALYN M. ARELLANO-MORALES, PRESIDING JUDGE OF THE REGIONAL TRIAL COURT OF DAVAO CITY, BRANCH 17, AND MINDANAO MEDICAL...

Ponente: INTING, J.

Read online (full-text search, related cases, audio case brief): <https://batas.org/library/2f7bb498a112/>

INTING, J.:

Before Us is a petition for certiorari under Rule 65 of the Rules of Court seeking to reverse and set aside the May 22, 2012 Order[1] of the Regional Trial Court Branch 17, Davao City granting the private respondent's prayer for a preliminary injunction against herein petitioner, and the September 11, 2012 Order[2] denying the latter's motion for reconsideration.

The facts of the case are as follows:

Private respondent Mindanao Medical Foundation College, Inc. operates a collegiate degree program for Bachelor of Science in Nursing per Government Recognition No. 23 issued on July 12, 1993. For less than two (2) decades since the 1990s, the institution has been producing medical-related professionals. In April of 2009, the Commission on Higher Education, pursuant to its mandate under RA 7722 to set minimum standards for programs and institutions of higher learning, to enforce those standards, and to monitor and evaluate the performance of programs and institutions of higher learning as well as the imposition of sanctions, formulated CHED Memorandum No. 14, series of 2009 (CMO 14-2009) setting the policies and standards for the B.S. Nursing programs. It provided for the gradual phase out of the nursing program of institutions wherein the passing rate in the Nursing Licensure Exam is less than 30% for at least three (3) successive board examinations. The transitory provisions granted the Higher Education Institutions three (3) years for the effectivity of the CMO to fully comply with the requirements. Its implementation shall be from school years 2010 to 2013 with the phase out to be carried out in 2013.[3]

Thereafter, private respondent undertook several projects and improvements in its institution to comply with the requirements under CMO 14-2009 including monetary investments and upgrading of required facilities and equipment.[4]

However, due to the disturbing decline in the national passing percentage adversely reflecting the quality of the nursing education being received by the nursing students, CHED necessitated to revisit the CMO 14-2009 sanctions. On July 29, 2011, CMO 18-2011 was issued and it introduced new guidelines in the implementation of the sanctions. Per CMO 18-2011, effective 2011, nursing programs of HEIs whose average passing rate in the NLE is 30% and below for three (3) consecutive examination years starting from 2008 and thereafter shall be immediately phased out.[5]

Meanwhile, private respondent's passing percentage for the years 2008 until 2010 were below the required 30% rate. On January 30, 2012, CHED sent a letter to the private respondent asking for a confirmation or correction of the data taken from the PRC which showed that for the past three (3) consecutive years the institution has been performing below the required standard, otherwise, the information shall be presumed correct. The private respondent allegedly failed to reply. On February 28, 2012, CHED advised the private respondent to submit a report on the decision as to how its closure shall be effected either by voluntary closure through phase-out process, or voluntary but outright closure or involuntary closure on or before March 1, 2012.

On April 30, 2012, private respondents filed an action for prohibition and injunction with prayer for TRO or writ of preliminary injunction before the RTC against CHED alleging that the modification of the CMO 14-2009 in the middle of the three (3) year period for its supposed compliance is arbitrary and akin to an ex-post facto law because the institution is being penalized for a past performance; and that the immediate phasing out of those whose passing is below 30% for the years starting 2008 and onwards violates due process and is an invalid exercise of police power. Further, the private respondent maintains that grave injustice and irreparable injury will befall on it once its nursing program is closed as it will lose an entire department which is the bulk of its student population with about nearly 100 employees and staff; and the closure will deny it the opportunity to reap the improvements on the performance of its graduates.

A temporary restraining order was issued in the private respondent's favor.

CHED filed its opposition to the private respondent's prayer for preliminary injunction asseverating that the latter is not entitled to an injunction because of its failure to show the existence of a right. All licenses may be revoked or rescinded because it is not a contract, property or property right protected by the due process clause of the constitution. Thus, the private respondent's permit to operate its nursing program may be revoked at any time by respondent if so warranted. CHED notes that the private respondent's 2011 passing rate is the lowest recorded since 2006 raising a serious doubt on its capacity to produce competent graduates. Further, an injunction is resorted to when there is no other adequate remedy. CHED avers that the private respondent should have filed an appeal before the Office of the President before coming to the court.

The RTC rendered the assailed May 22, 2012 Order granting the private respondent's prayer for the issuance of a preliminary injunction. The RTC held that while the license or permit is not a property right protected by the due process clause, its revocation is an act of police power which must be exercised in a reasonable and not arbitrary manner; that the CMO 18-2011 failed to consider the detrimental effect of an immediate phase out of the nursing program not only to the private respondent's employees but also the students who will be displaced with no assurance that they will be accepted in other nursing schools; that the end of the CMO is noble but the means employed is unreasonable and arbitrary; that even if the private respondent failed to exhaust administrative remedies, the instant case falls under the exception; and that the immediate closure of the private respondent's nursing program during pendency of the litigation would work injustice to the applicant.

CHED's motion for reconsideration[6] was denied. Hence, this petition alleging that the court a quo abused its discretion amounting to lack or excess of jurisdiction in issuing the writ of preliminary injunction despite private respondent's utter failure to prove the requirements for its issuance. Petitioner argues that private respondent has no clear and unmistakable right to be protected because like any other schools, it operates by virtue of a permit which contains a proviso for revocation if the required standards are not met. Thus, being a mere privilege, the private respondent's government recognition did not vest in it a right that it may assert against the authority which granted it. Further, CHED maintains that there was yet no invasion of a right because the letter sent to the private respondent is not a closure order but only a confirmation or correction of the data. CHED also counters the private respondent's claim of irreparable injury since it is based on its estimated income which is capable of mathematical computation and is easily quantifiable. Moreover, the private respondent can still file a motion for reconsideration of the phase-out order hence, there was failure for them to exhaust administrative remedies.

Our Ruling

The petition is with merit.

It is worthy to stress that the issue before the court a quo is not on the main action of prohibition but rather on the provisional remedy of preliminary injunction which sole aim is to preserve the status quo until the merits of the case can be heard fully.[7] The grant of a preliminary injunction is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, conditioned on the existence of a clear and positive right of the applicant which should be protected.[8] Extreme caution must be observed in the exercise of such discretion.[9] It should be granted only when the court is fully satisfied that the law permits it and the emergency demands it.[10] The rule requires that in order for a writ of preliminary injunction to issue, the application should clearly allege facts and circumstances showing the existence of the requisites. It must be emphasized that an application for injunctive relief is construed strictly against the pleader.[11]

In Thunder Security and Investigation Agency v. NFA,^[12] the Supreme Court enumerates the following requisites which must be proved before a writ of preliminary injunction, be it mandatory or prohibitory, will issue:

(1)

The applicant must have a clear and unmistakable right to be protected, that is a right in esse;

(2)

There is a material and substantial invasion of such right;

(3)

There is an urgent need for the writ to prevent irreparable injury to the applicant; and

(4)

No other ordinary, speedy, and adequate remedy exists to prevent the infliction of irreparable injury.

The twin requirements of a valid injunction are the existence of a right and its actual or threatened violations. Thus, to be entitled to an injunctive writ, the right to be protected and the violation against that right must be shown. A writ of preliminary injunction may be issued only upon clear showing of an actual existing right to be protected during the pendency of the principal action.^[13]

In the case of Philippine Merchant Marine School, Inc. v. CA,^[14] the Supreme Court profoundly discussed the concept regarding the establishment of schools and We quote:

"The educational operation of schools is subject to prior authorization of the government and is effected by recognition. In the case of government-operated schools, whether local, regional or national, recognition of educational programs and/or operations is deemed granted simultaneously with establishment. In all other cases the rules and regulations governing recognition are prescribed and enforced by the DECS, defining therein who are qualified to apply, providing for a permit system, stating the conditions for the grant of recognition and for its cancellation and withdrawal, and providing for related matters. The requirement on prior government authorization is pursuant to the State policy that educational programs and/or operations shall be of good quality and therefore shall at least satisfy minimum standards with respect to curricula, teaching staff, physical plant and facilities and of administrative or management viability." (Underscoring ours)

On May 18, 1994, Congress approved R.A. No. 7722^[15] which paved the way for the creation of the Commission on Higher Education which shall be independent from DECS and attached to the Office of the President for administrative purposes only. Its coverage shall be both public and private institutions of higher education as well as degree-granting programs in post-secondary educational institutions, public and private. Its powers and functions include monitoring and evaluating the performance of programs and institutions of higher learning for appropriate incentives as well as the imposition of sanctions such as, but not limited to, diminution or withdrawal of subsidy, recommendation on the downgrading or withdrawal of accreditation, program termination and school closure. By virtue thereof, the authority and supervision over all public and private institutions of higher education, as well as degree-granting programs in all post-secondary educational institutions, public and private, belong to the CHED.[16] Section 2, Article II of CMO 14- 2009 provides that all private higher education institutions intending to offer B.S. Nursing programs must first secure proper authority from the Commission.

From the foregoing, it is clear that the private respondent's operation of its nursing program was never its right from the very beginning. It is only a privilege founded on certain criterions and conditions in which the institution's failure to abide would cause its revocation. This is explicit in the government recognition issued by the DECS which pertinently states in substance that the authority granted shall be revoked in case of failure of the school to observe and maintain any of the required standards affecting the course approved.[17] The private respondent thus, has no right in esse which is a prerequisite for the issuance of a preliminary injunction. A right in esse is a clear and unmistakable right to be protected, one clearly founded on or granted by law or is enforceable as a matter of law.[18] A party seeking to avail of an injunctive relief must prove that he or she possesses a right in esse or one that is actual or existing. It should not be contingent, abstract, or future rights, or one which may never arise.[19] In the instant case, the private respondent fell flat in proving that to operate its nursing program is its right hence, it failed to satisfy an essential requisite for the grant of an injunction. Nothing was proffered to persuade of the private respondent's clear and unmistakable right to continue its nursing program amidst its failure to meet the standards set by the authorities.

Assuming that the private respondent has the right to operate the nursing program and there was an invasion of such right, an injunction is still not apt. It is not a function of the writ of preliminary injunction to restrain a public officer from performing a duty imposed by law or to permit the doing of that which is declared unlawful.[20] In the case of Cariño v. Capulong,[21] the Supreme Court found erroneous the trial judge's issuance of a writ of preliminary injunction against petitioner DECS, holding therein that DECS is authorized to impose total closure of schools and in doing so, it was only performing its duties as public officers. Hence, the respondent Judge should not have issued the writ of preliminary injunction.

Analogously, in the case at bench, CHED's duty in regulating HEIs is unquestionable. So is its power to order the closure of the institutions which are performing beneath the standards set. Hence, CHED was merely performing its task when it urged the private respondents to close its nursing program. Further, it bears emphasis that the assailed CMO was not yet declared unlawful or unconstitutional. The constitutionality of laws is presumed.[22] Accordingly, the sanctions imposed by the CMO are presumed valid and it follows that CHED was still doing its lawful mandate when it ordered for the closure of the private respondent's nursing program.

Moreover, We find that the private respondent will not sustain irreparable damage should its prayer for a preliminary injunction be denied. It is settled that a writ of preliminary injunction should be issued only to prevent grave and irreparable injury, that is, injury that is actual, substantial, and demonstrable.[23] As explained in Heirs of Yu v. CA: [24]

"Damages are irreparable within the meaning of the rule relative to the issuance of injunction where there is no standard by which their amount can be measured with reasonable accuracy. 'An irreparable injury which a court of equity will enjoin includes that degree of wrong of a repeated and continuing kind which produce hurt, inconvenience, or damage that can be estimated only by conjecture, and not by any accurate standard of measurement.' An irreparable injury to authorize an injunction consists of a serious charge of, or is destructive to, the property it affects, either physically or in the character in which it has been held and enjoined, or when the property has some peculiar quality or use, so that its pecuniary value will not fairly recompense the owner of the loss thereof." (Emphasis supplied)

In the case before Us, the private respondent found its claims of damages on the potential losses it will incur if the nursing program will cease to operate. As stated in its petition before the court a quo, once the nursing program is closed down, grave and irreparable injury would befall on it since it will lose an entire department which has the bulk of the student population, the loss of livelihood of its employees and staff, displacing them and denying it the opportunity to reap any improvements in the performance of its graduates after full compliance with the CMO requirements. However, the damages that may be incurred in closing down a department are certainly quantifiable. The displaced employees are subject to separation pays as computed in the labor code. Of course, the funds invested by the private respondent into its BSN program can likewise be computed and determined. It is not the irreparable injury as defined by law that would warrant the grant of an injunction. To be entitled to injunctive relief the party seeking such relief must be able to show grave, irreparable injury that is not capable of compensation or not susceptible of mathematical computation.[25]

Granting that there might be irreparable damage to the private respondent, it is of no moment for mere possibility of irreparable damage without proof of an actually existing right is no ground for an injunction being a mere damnum absque injuria. [26]

In the case of The Board of Medical Education v. Alfonso, [27] the college therein justifies its entitlement to the questioned injunction on the ground that the closure order against which it was directed was issued without factual basis and in violation of the right of the college to due process of law and that it violated the MECS Order to the effect that the penalty of closure cannot be imposed earlier than three (3) years from the last evaluation. The Supreme Court found otherwise and ruled:

"Given these facts, and it being a matter of law that the Secretary of Education, Culture and Sports exercises the power to enjoin compliance with the requirements laid down for medical schools and to mete out sanctions where he finds that violations thereof have been committed, it was a grave abuse of discretion for the respondent judge to issue the questioned injunction and thereby thwart official action, in the premises correctly taken, allowing the College to operate without the requisite government permit."

In the same vein, herein court a quo's issuance of the preliminary injunction cannot be upheld for lack of substantial basis. The private respondent not only failed to establish a right that needs to be protected or an irreparable injury not capable of compensation but it is beyond doubt that the CHED was merely performing its decreed duty and again, it is not a function of the writ of preliminary injunction to restrain a public officer from performing its tasks.

WHEREFORE, the instant petition is GRANTED. The May 22, 2012 and the September 11, 2012 Orders of the Regional Trial Court Branch 17, Davao City are annulled and set aside. The corresponding writ of preliminary injunction is declared void.

SO ORDERED.

Camello, (Chairperson), and Perez, JJ., concur.

[1] Rollo, pp. 35-41.

[2] Ibid, pp. 62-63.

- [3] Supra, pp. 64-82.
- [4] Ibid.
- [5] Supra, pp. 3-8.
- [6] Supra, pp. 43-58.
- [7] Marquez v. Sanchez, G.R. No. 141849, February 13, 2007.
- [8] Ibid.
- [9] Ibid.
- [10] Ibid.
- [11] Supra.
- [12] Thunder Security and Investigation Agency v. NFA, G.R. No. 182042, July 27, 2011.
- [13] Equitable PCI Bank v. OJ-Mark Trading, Inc., G.R. No. 165950, August 11, 2010.
- [14] G.R. No. 112844, June 2, 1995.
- [15] An Act Creating the Commission on Higher Education, Appropriating Funds Thereof and for other purposes.
- [16] De la Salle University, Inc. v. CA, G.R. No. 127980, December 19, 2007.
- [17] Rollo, p. 141.
- [18] Lim v. BPI, G.R. No. 179230, March 9, 2010.
- [19] Office of the City Mayor of Parañaque, et.al. v. Ebio, et.al., G.R. No. 178411, June 23, 2010.
- [20] Cariño v. Capulong, G.R. No. 97203, May 26, 1993.
- [21] Ibid.
- [22] Salvador v. Mapa, Jr., G.R. No. 135080, November 28, 2007.
- [23] Heirs of Yu v. CA, G.R. No. 182371, September 4, 2013.
- [24] Ibid.
- [25] DFA v. Falcon, G.R. No. 176657, September 2, 2010.
- [26] Supra.
- [27] G.R. No. 88259, August 10, 1989.

ABOUT BATAS.ORG

Study smarter at BATAS.org

The Philippine bar review and law-school companion built around how your brain actually remembers.

The complete Philippine law library - free for everyone.

More than 100,000 Supreme Court decisions, Republic Acts, and executive issuances - full-text searchable, browsable by category and year, and always free. No paywall, no login. This PDF came from it.

Audio case-brief lectures.

Any decision becomes a podcast-style lecture - facts, issues, ruling, and doctrine - with read-along highlighting and a hands-free presentation mode. Study while commuting, working out, or resting your eyes.

Bar review built on the science of memory.

Complete, sequenced courses for all eight bar subjects, narrated like podcasts and reinforced with retrieval practice and spaced review - the study techniques with the strongest evidence behind them.

The full law-school curriculum.

One subscription unlocks the entire J.D. curriculum - every subject, every lesson, with your progress tracked down to the paragraph so you can pick up exactly where you left off, on any device.

Mock exams that tell you where you stand.

Timed multiple-choice exams graded instantly, with per-subject score breakdowns and focus suggestions that point you at your weakest topics first.

A study planner that keeps you on pace.

Set your schedule and BATAS tells you every day whether you are on track for bar day - and exactly which lesson to take next.

Start free at <https://batas.org>

The law library is free forever - and your first lesson is one click away.

The text of this document is an official public record and remains in the public domain. Formatting, presentation, and compilation © 2026 batas.org.

Downloaded free from the batas.org Law Library. Share it freely - the library is free for every law student, bar reviewee, and practitioner.